Decibels are logarithmic, not linear. For example, 20 dB is not twice the power ratio of 10 dB. The defining equation for decibels is $A = 10 \cdot \log_{10}(P2/P1)$ (dB) where P1 is the power being measured, and P1 is the reference to which P2 is being compared. To convert from decibel measure back to power ratio: $P2/P1 = 10^{(A/10)}$

"Deja Vu" is one of those rare films that grabs a hold of you from the very start and does not let go of you until the very end. People even clapped after the film ended and such applause was well deserved. If you do anything at all this Thanksgiving weekend, then by all means, put going to see "Deja Vu" on your shopping list.

VU and dB meters both measure the audio power involved in recording and they both use logarithmic scales to report that power. Because of these logarithmic scales, a factor of 10 increase in power produces an increase of 10 in both the VU reading and the dB reading. For example, -20 dB is 10 times the power of -30 dB.
